

University of Bradford eThesis

This thesis is hosted in Bradford Scholars – The University of Bradford Open Access repository. Visit the repository for full metadata or to contact the repository team.

Reader R (2012) Over the ditch and far away: Investigating Broxmouth and the landscape of South-East Scotland during the later prehistoric period. PhD Thesis. University of Bradford.

© University of Bradford. This work is licenced for reuse under a Creative Commons Licence.

Acknowledgments

First and foremost I would like to thank Professor Ian Armit (Broxmouth Project Director) at the University of Bradford for allowing me to carry out my research and contribute to the Broxmouth Project. Thanks also goes to my fellow PhD researchers Mhairi Maxwell and Lindsey Büster for providing endless hours of discussion and cups of tea which helped to make this research experience a thoroughly enjoyable one. It was a delight to meet the original excavator of Broxmouth, Peter Hill, and subsequent discussions with him provided a useful insight into the excavation. Other original excavators, including Anne Crone, Nigel Neil, Rod McCullagh and Strat Halliday provided useful information, as well as amusing anecdotes.

The funding for this PhD came from a Collaborative Doctoral Award from the Arts and Humanities Research Council, also supplemented by Historic Scotland who was the primary funder of the Broxmouth Project. Without this generous funding, this PhD would not have been completed within the time frame. The AHRC Research Travel Stipend Grant contributed towards the cost of GIS courses, which have further enhanced this thesis.

Professor Ian Armit must be thanked for his supervision and advice as well as Dr Jo McKenzie and Dr Noel Fojut at Historic Scotland who guided and supervised at various times over the course of three years. Dr Jo McKenzie was unstinting in her support with all aspects to do with the project itself and utilising the data to form a coherent study. Rachael Kershaw provided the illustrations on behalf of the Broxmouth Project, as well as providing crash courses in Adobe Illustrator and AutoCAD.

Thanks must also go to Dr Randy Donahue and Steve Dockrill for their comments and feedback on my transfer document, which ultimately helped to shape the path that the thesis took.

Rod McCullagh must be thanked for supervising my placement at Historic Scotland, as well as offering me a unique insight into the excavation at Broxmouth thirty years ago. Dr Mark Watson and Dr James Bruhn also helped to make my experience at Historic Scotland enjoyable.

Dave Cowley at the Royal Commission of Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland gave me access to the transcribed cropmark data for East Lothian, without which this PhD would have been near impossible to complete on time. His advice and support during this time has helped to shape the landscape analysis. Thanks must also go to Strat Halliday for his words of wisdom on Broxmouth and the East Lothian landscape. Dr James Bruhn and Andy Parkyn's help with all matters regarding GIS has been extremely useful. A chance meeting with Steve Toase led to insightful discussions on the embodiment of enclosure construction and also provided a copy of his unpublished MA dissertation. Ruth Nottage also provided data from her unpublished BA dissertation and provided stimulating discussions on the forts of East Lothian. Stephanie Leith also facilitated access to East Lothian's HER. Tim Neighbour at CFA and Simon Stronach at Headland Archaeology provided access to unpublished data structure reports on Hallhill Farm, Dunbar and Drylawhill and I am eternally grateful. I also want to thank the landowner Willie Hamilton (Garvald Mains) and the fishermen at Green Castle for allowing me to wander around their land 'experiencing' hillforts.

I must also thank the people who have helped me to love the Iron Age and the landscape, in particular Dr John Carman and Niall Sharples. I must also thank those who have contributed to making my time at Bradford enjoyable and also keeping me sane (Lindsey Büster, Mhairi Maxwell, Robert Legg, Irene Frankofsky-Legg, Emma Brown, Andy Parkyn, Dan Bashford and Zoe Outram). Nicky Smalley also provided encouragement during my hours of doubt, as did my parents, Alison and John. Finally thanks goes to Graeme Attwood for providing positive encouragement and emotional support during some of my more incoherent ramblings.